

Orpheus and Eurydice

There once lived a musician called Orpheus, who played his lyre (instrument) so beautifully that it would put a spell on all who heard it. His music was so powerful that it could turn bad men good and tame the wildest of beasts.

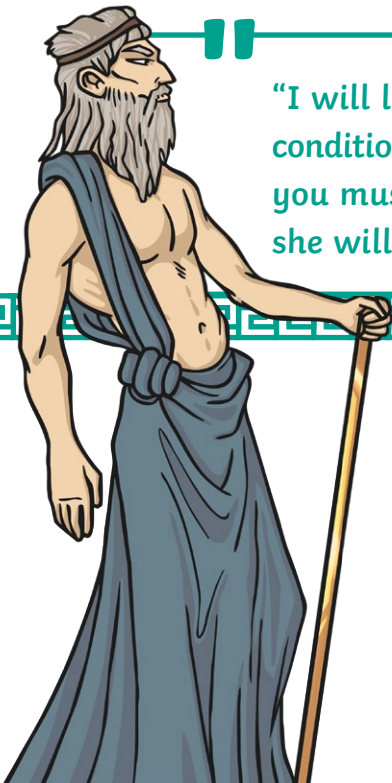

One day, Orpheus met a beautiful woman whose name was Eurydice. When she saw Orpheus playing his lyre, her heart melted. They promptly fell in love and were soon married.

Not long after, Eurydice was walking through the woods when she tripped and fell to the ground. From beneath a log slid a poisonous snake, which bit her, killing her instantaneously.

Orpheus was devastated and could not bear the thought of life without his wife, so he decided to try to bring Eurydice back to him. He set off to find Hades, god of the underworld, to beg for Eurydice to be brought back to life. Hades was so moved by the music Orpheus played, that he set him a challenge:

“I will let Eurydice follow you out of the underworld on one condition. Whatever obstacles you face on your journey, you must not look back at your wife. If you do, she will forever stay here with me.”

Orpheus was willing to do anything to get his wife back and thought this sounded easy, so accepted the challenge at once! Orpheus set off with his beautiful wife, Eurydice, behind him.

Soon he came to a huge wooden door, chained shut. He played a magical tune and the door swung open and Orpheus carried on. He desperately wanted to turn around to check on Eurydice but managed not to.

Next, Orpheus found himself inside a dark room. He could hear heavy breathing which quickly turned into a deep, rumbling growl and then a thunderous roar. Orpheus' heart pounded as he began to make out the shape of a huge three-headed dog ahead of him.

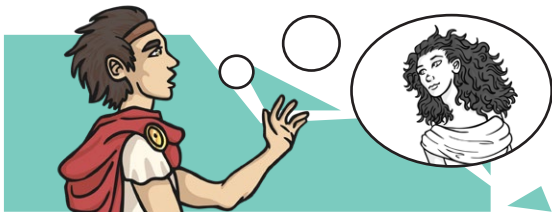

It was Cerberus – Hades' giant hound. Orpheus grabbed his lyre and, with trembling hands, he began to play. Immediately the dog dropped to the ground and started snoring. Orpheus crept over the dog's huge paws and slipped out the room.

In his terror, Orpheus forgot about Eurydice and panicked whether she had also made it past the dog. Then he remembered Hades' words:

Eurydice would follow safely if he did not look back.

Up ahead, Orpheus could see two boats on a river. He climbed into the first boat and set sail. Orpheus could hear Eurydice following him in the second boat and smiled happily, knowing his quest was nearly complete.

Suddenly, huge waves started to crash against the boat, knocking Orpheus over. He scrambled around for his instrument and managed to strum out a single sound.

At once, the waters calmed. Orpheus' music had saved him again!

Orpheus listened for Eurydice behind him but could not hear her boat. Without thinking, he turned around to look. Eurydice was there, sailing towards him waving and smiling, filling his heart with joy! Then it happened. Eurydice's boat plunged downwards, under the water and in a heartbeat, she was gone.

Orpheus was distraught that Eurydice had been lost to him again. He had almost succeeded, but his foolishness had cost him dearly. He never forgave himself and played bitter, sad music for the rest of his life.

Questions

1. What musical instrument did Orpheus play?

2. How did Eurydice die?

3. Where did Orpheus go to try and get Eurydice back? Tick one.

- ☐ Orpheus travelled to heaven to beg Hades to bring her back to life.
- ☐ Orpheus travelled to the underworld to beg Cerberus to bring her back to life.
- ☐ Orpheus travelled to the underworld to beg Hades to bring her back to life.
- ☐ Orpheus travelled to heaven to beg Cerberus to bring her back to life.

4. Number the events from 1–3 to show the order that they happened in the story.

- ☐ Orpheus scrabbled around for his instrument and managed to strum out a single sound and the waters calmed.
- ☐ Orpheus played a magical tune and the door swung open.
- ☐ Orpheus grabbed his lyre and, with trembling hands, he began to play to Cerberus.

5. Orpheus was scared when he saw Cerberus. Find a sentence in the story that tells us this.

6. Orpheus listened for Eurydice behind him but could not hear her boat.

At this point in the story, what advice would you give to Orpheus? Explain your answer.

7. Orpheus thought his quest would be easy. Why did he fail?

8. Compare the music that Orpheus played at the beginning of the story to the music he played at the end.

Answers

1. What musical instrument did Orpheus play?
Orpheus played the lyre.
2. How did Eurydice die?
Eurydice was bitten by a poisonous snake, killing her instantaneously.
3. Where did Orpheus go to try and get Eurydice back? Tick one.
 - ☐ Orpheus travelled to heaven to beg Hades to bring her back to life.
 - ☐ Orpheus travelled to the underworld to beg Cerberus to bring her back to life.
 - ☒ Orpheus travelled to the underworld to beg Hades to bring her back to life.
 - ☐ Orpheus travelled to heaven to beg Cerberus to bring her back to life.
4. Number the events from 1–3 to show the order that they happened in the story.
 - 3 Orpheus scrambled around for his instrument and managed to strum out a single sound and the waters calmed.
 - 1 Orpheus played a magical tune and the door swung open.
 - 2 Orpheus grabbed his lyre and, with trembling hands, he began to play to Cerberus.
5. Orpheus was scared when he saw Cerberus. Find a sentence in the story that tells us this.
Accept either of the following: “Orpheus’ heart pounded as he began to make out the shape of a huge three-headed dog ahead of him” or “Orpheus grabbed his lyre and, with trembling hands, he began to play.”
6. Orpheus listened for Eurydice behind him but could not hear her boat.
At this point in the story, what advice would you give to Orpheus? Explain your answer.
Pupils’ own responses, such as: I would tell Orpheus to not look behind him and to remember Hades’ words that Eurydice would follow safely if he did not look back.
7. Orpheus thought his quest would be easy. Why did he fail?
Pupils’ own responses, such as: Orpheus failed because he was anxious to see Eurydice again and he was scared for her safety.
8. Compare the music that Orpheus played at the beginning of the story to the music he played at the end.
Pupils’ own responses, such as: Orpheus played beautiful, enchanting music at the beginning compared to sad, bitter music at the end.

Orpheus and Eurydice

There once lived a musician called Orpheus, whose beautiful lyre playing would enchant all who heard it. His music was so powerful that it could turn bad men good and tame the wildest of beasts.

One day, Orpheus met the most beautiful woman he had ever seen. Her name was Eurydice and Orpheus was so captivated by her charm and beauty that he fell in love with her immediately. When Eurydice saw Orpheus playing his lyre, her heart melted, and she too fell in love. They married at once and were blissfully happy together.

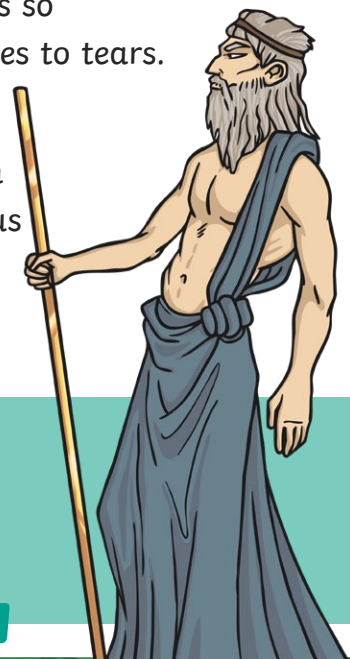

Eurydice was walking through the woods one day when she stumbled on a log and fell to the ground. From beneath the log slid a venomous and deadly snake, which bit her, killing Eurydice instantly.

Orpheus was so distraught when he heard the tragic news and could not bear the thought of life without Eurydice.

He played his lyre to help ease the pain and his music was so haunting, it moved men, gods and even the plants and trees to tears.

Orpheus decided to try to bring Eurydice back to him. He set off to find Hades, god of the underworld, to plead with him to return Eurydice to the human world. When Orpheus played his music, Hades was so disturbed, that he agreed to give him a chance and presented a challenge to the eager musician:

“I will permit Eurydice follow you out of the underworld on one condition. Whatever obstacles you encounter on your journey, do not look back at your wife. If you do, she will remain here with me eternally.”

Orpheus accepted the challenge at once. If all he had to do was not look back at Eurydice, then that would be easy, he thought!

Orpheus started on his voyage with hope in his heart and his beautiful wife, Eurydice, behind him. Soon he came to a gigantic wooden door, chained shut. He played a magical tune and the chains burst off and the door swung open, allowing Orpheus to journey on. He longed to turn around to check on Eurydice but resisted.

Next, Orpheus found himself inside a dark, dank room. He was aware of the sound of heavy breathing which quickly turned into a deep, rumbling growl and then a thunderous roar. Orpheus' heart pounded as he began to make out the shape of a huge three-headed dog staring back at him, hungrily.

It was Cerberus – Hades' giant hound. Orpheus grabbed his lyre and, with trembling hands, began to play a soothing melody. Immediately, the dog dropped to the ground and started snoring.

In his terror, Orpheus forgot about Eurydice and panicked about whether she had also made it past the dog. Then he remembered Hades' words:

Eurydice would follow unharmed if he did not look back.

Up ahead, Orpheus saw two boats moored on the inky black waters of the River Styx. He climbed into the first boat and set sail. Orpheus could hear Eurydice following him in the second boat and smiled happily, knowing he had nearly succeeded in his quest.

Suddenly, a huge wave crashed against the boat, knocking Orpheus to the deck, and slick, black hands began to grab at him from the murky waters.

He scrambled for his instrument and managed to strum out a single note. At once the hands relaxed and the waters calmed. Orpheus' music had rescued him once more!

Orpheus strained to hear Eurydice behind him but there was only silence. Without thinking, he turned around to look. Eurydice was there, sailing towards him waving and smiling, filling his heart with joy! Then it happened. Eurydice's boat plunged downwards, under the water and in a heartbeat, she was gone.

Eurydice had been lost to him for a second time. Orpheus had almost succeeded but his foolishness had cost him severely. He was devastated and would never forgive himself and played bitter, sombre music for the rest of his days.

Questions

1. How do we know that Orpheus' music was so powerful?

2. What was Orpheus captivated by when he first met Eurydice? List two things.

- ---
- ---

3. Find and copy two words which show that the snake was poisonous.

- ---
- ---

4. Number the events from 1–4 to show the order that they happened in the story.

- ☐ Orpheus was knocked to the deck and slick, black hands began to grab at him.
- ☐ Orpheus played a magical tune and the chains burst off and the door swung open.
- ☐ Orpheus crept over Cerberus' monstrous paws and slipped out the room.
- ☐ Orpheus turned around to see Eurydice sailing towards him, waving and smiling.

5. How do we know that Cerberus was frightening? Use evidence from the text to explain your answer.

6. Orpheus strained to hear Eurydice behind him but there was only silence. Without thinking, he turned around to look.

Imagine how would you feel if you were Orpheus in this situation and describe what would you do.

7. Draw three lines to match the type of music Orpheus played with the different events in the story

Orpheus played his lyre to Hades to plead with him to return Eurydice to the human world.

His music was bitter and sombre.

Orpheus played a melody for Cerberus.

His music was disturbing.

Orpheus was devastated and would never forgive himself.

His music was soothing.

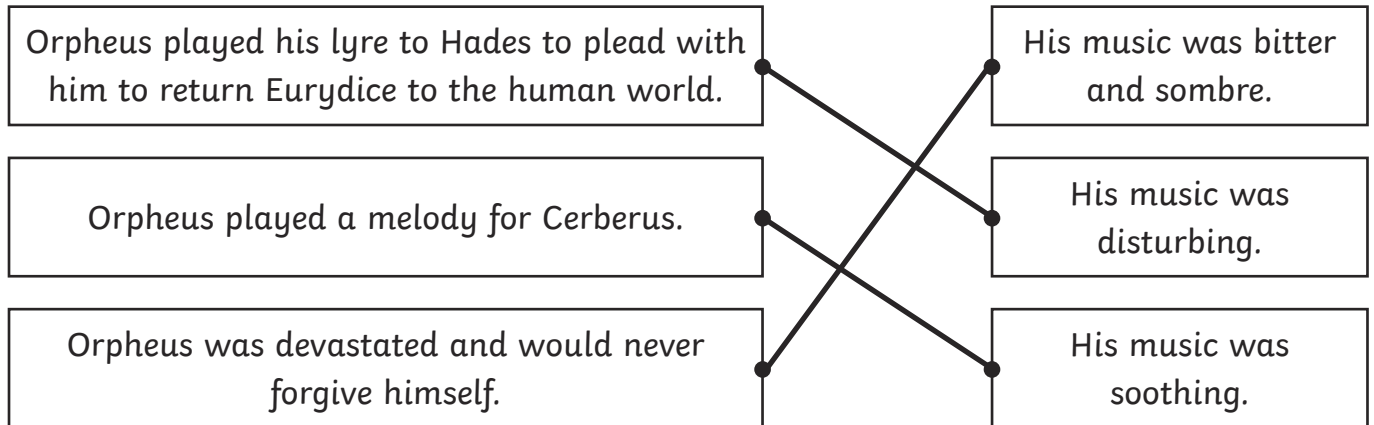

8. Compare the music that Orpheus played at the beginning of the story to the music he played at the end. Why did it change?

9. Explain why Orpheus would never forgive himself and whether you think he should or not.

Answers

1. How do we know that Orpheus' music was so powerful?
Orpheus' music was so powerful that it could turn bad men good and tame the wildest of beasts.
2. What was Orpheus captivated by when he first met Eurydice? List two things.
 - Her charm.
 - Her beauty.
3. Find and copy two words which show that the snake was poisonous.
 - venomous
 - deadly
4. Number the events from 1–4 to show the order that they happened in the story.
 - 3 Orpheus was knocked to the deck and slick, black hands began to grab at him.
 - 1 Orpheus played a magical tune and the chains burst off and the door swung open.
 - 2 Orpheus crept over Cerberus' monstrous paws and slipped out the room.
 - 4 Orpheus turned around to see Eurydice sailing towards him, waving and smiling.
5. How do we know that Cerberus was frightening? Use evidence from the text to explain your answer.
Pupils' own responses, such as: We know that Cerberus was frightening because it describes him as being huge with a thunderous roar and three heads. Also, Orpheus' heart was pounding when he saw the dog staring at him which would suggest he was frightened.
6. Orpheus strained to hear Eurydice behind him but there was only silence. Without thinking, he turned around to look.
 Imagine how would you feel if you were Orpheus in this situation and describe what would you do.
Pupils' own responses, such as: I would be worried about Eurydice's safety and tempted to turn around to look to see if she were safe. I would not turn around, however, as I would remember Hades' words that Eurydice would follow unharmed if I did not look back.

7. Draw three lines to match the type of music Orpheus played with the different events in the story

8. Compare the music that Orpheus played at the beginning of the story to the music he played at the end. Why did it change?

Pupils' own responses, such as: Orpheus played beautiful, enchanting music at the beginning compared to bitter, sombre music at the end. It changed because his mood changed from being happy and in love at the beginning to sad and lonely at the end.

9. Explain why Orpheus would never forgive himself and whether you think he should or not.

Pupils' own responses, such as: Orpheus would not forgive himself because it was his fault that Eurydice was taken to the underworld and he could have saved her if he did not look back.

Orpheus and Eurydice

There once lived a musician named Orpheus, whose beautiful lyre playing would captivate all who heard it. His music was so powerful that it could turn bad men good and tame the wildest of beasts.

One day, Orpheus met the most beautiful woman he had ever seen. Her name was Eurydice and Orpheus was completely entranced by her charm and beauty and fell in love with her immediately. When Eurydice saw Orpheus playing his lyre, her heart melted and she too fell in love. They married at once and were blissfully happy together.

Eurydice was strolling through the woods one day when she stumbled over a log, landing with a thud on the ground. From beneath the log, a poisonous and deadly snake slid out and bit her. Its venom was so potent, she died instantly.

Orpheus was distraught when he heard the tragic news and inconsolable in his grief.

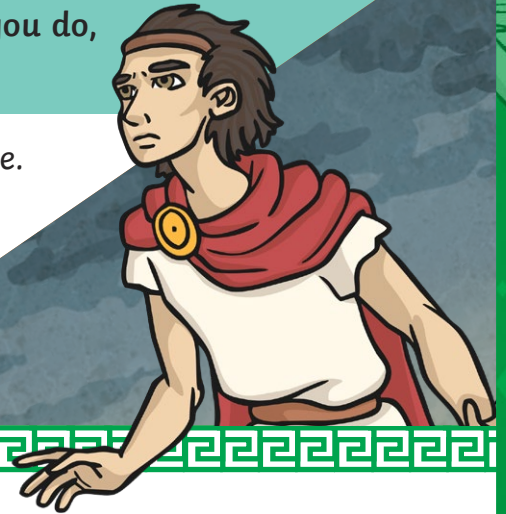

He played his lyre to help ease the pain and the music that emanated from his instrument was so haunting that it moved men, gods and even the plants and trees to tears.

Orpheus decided he must try to bring Eurydice back to him. He set out on a daring quest to find Hades, god of the underworld, to plead with him to return Eurydice to the human world.

"I will permit Eurydice to follow you out of the underworld on one condition. Whatever obstacles you encounter on your journey, you must not look back at your wife. If you do, she will remain here with me for eternity."

Orpheus did not hesitate in accepting the challenge. He was prepared to do anything to get his treasured wife back and if all he had to do was not look at Eurydice as she followed him out of the underworld, that would be easy!

Orpheus started on his voyage with hope in his heart and his beautiful Eurydice close behind him. Soon he came to a gigantic wooden door, chained shut. Lifting his lyre, his quick fingers played a magical tune and the chains burst off. The door swung open, allowing Orpheus to journey on. He longed to turn around to check on Eurydice but resisted.

Beyond the wooden door, Orpheus found himself inside a dank, dark room. The air was thick and stagnant. Orpheus felt his way along the moist, slimy walls, moving as quickly as he dared.

He became aware of heavy breathing and suddenly a deep, rumbling growl began to resonate off the walls, bursting into a deafening and thunderous roar.

Orpheus' heart pounded as he began to make out the shape of a colossal three-headed dog looming over him menacingly. Orpheus recognised the beast to be Cerberus – Hades' grotesque hound.

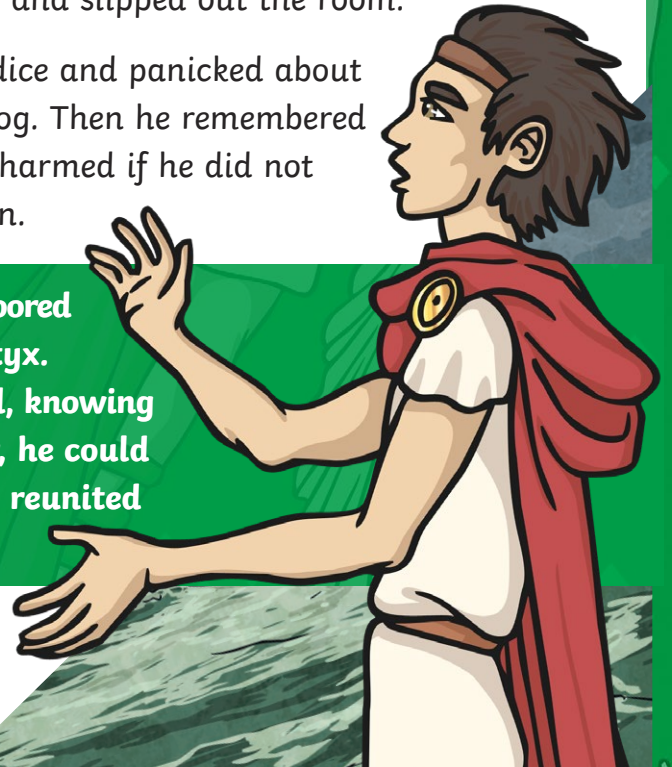

As quick as a flash, Orpheus grabbed his lyre and, with trembling hands, began to play a soothing melody. At once, the beastly dog was pacified and dropped to the ground, mesmerised by the serene music. Soon he was snoring, and Orpheus crept nervously over his monstrous paws and slipped out the room.

In his terror, Orpheus forgot about Eurydice and panicked about whether she had also made it past the dog. Then he remembered Hades' words: Eurydice would follow, unharmed if he did not look back, and he managed to calm down.

In the distance, Orpheus saw two boats moored on the inky black waters of the River Styx. He climbed into the first boat and set sail, knowing that once he had sailed across the river, he could pass back into the mortal world and be reunited with his beautiful wife again.

Orpheus could hear Eurydice following in the second boat and smiled, knowing he had nearly succeeded in his quest.

Suddenly, a huge wave appeared from nowhere and crashed against the boat, knocking Orpheus to the deck. Slick, black hands began to grab at him and pull him towards the murky waters. He scrambled for his instrument and managed to strum out a single note with one free hand. At once, the hands relaxed and the waters calmed. Orpheus' music was the saviour once more!

Orpheus strained to hear Eurydice behind him but there was only silence. Had the hands taken Eurydice? Where was her boat?

In despair, Orpheus turned around without thinking to look for her. Eurydice was there! Sailing towards him, she waved, filling his heart with elation. Then it happened. Eurydice's boat plunged downwards, below the water and in a heartbeat, she was gone.

Eurydice had been lost to him for a second time. Orpheus had almost succeeded but his foolishness had cost him profoundly. He would never forgive himself and played bitter, sombre music mourning her death for the rest of his days.

Questions

1. How do we know that Orpheus' music was so powerful? Give two reasons.
 1. _____
 2. _____
2. What made Orpheus fall in love with Eurydice when he saw her? List two things.
 - _____
 - _____
3. Find and copy one word which shows that the snake's venom was powerful.

4. Number the events from 1–5 to show the order that they happened in the story. The first one has been done for you.
 - ☐ Slick, black hands began to grab at Orpheus and pull him towards the murky waters.
 - ☐ Orpheus' quick fingers played a magical tune and the chains burst off.
 - ☐ Orpheus crept nervously over Cerberus' monstrous paws and slipped out the room.
 - ☐ In despair, Orpheus turned around without thinking to look for her.
 - ☒ 1 Orpheus set out on a daring quest to find Hades, to plead with him to return Eurydice to the human world.
5. How do we know that Cerberus was frightening? Use evidence from the text to explain your answer.

6. Describe how you would feel and what you would do if you were Orpheus and could not hear Eurydice following behind you in the boat.

7. Draw four lines to match the type of music Orpheus played with the different events in the story.

Orpheus played his lyre to help ease his pain.

His music was disturbing.

Orpheus played his lyre to Hades to plead with him to return Eurydice to the human world.

His music was haunting.

Orpheus played a melody for Cerberus.

His music was bitter and sombre.

Orpheus was devastated and would never forgive himself.

His music was soothing.

8. Compare and contrast the music that Orpheus played at two different points in the story. Why did it change?

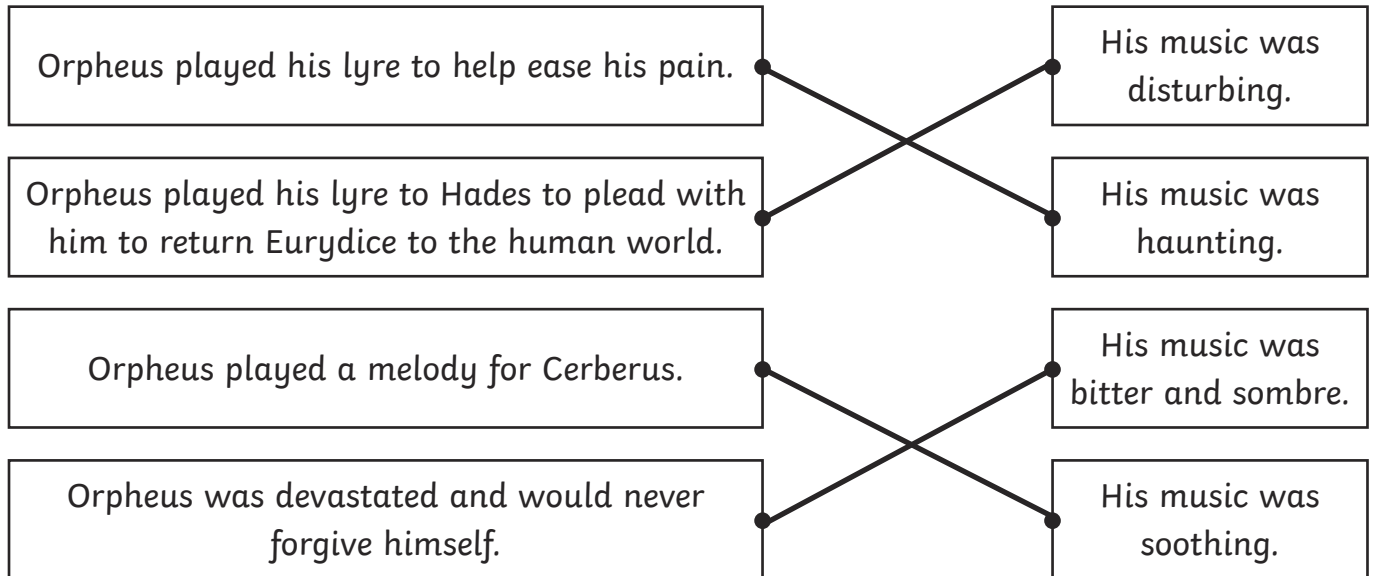

9. Orpheus faced three obstacles on his journey out of the underworld. What were these obstacles? Which do you think was the most challenging and why?

10. Was Orpheus' quest really that difficult? Explain your answer in detail.

Answers

1. How do we know that Orpheus' music was so powerful? Give two reasons.
 - It could turn bad man good.
 - It could tame the wildest of beasts.
2. What made Orpheus fall in love with Eurydice when he saw her? List two things.
 - Her charm.
 - Her beauty.
3. Find and copy one word which shows that the snake's venom was powerful.
potent
4. Number the events from 1–5 to show the order that they happened in the story. The first one has been done for you.
 - 4 Slick, black hands began to grab at Orpheus and pull him towards the murky waters.
 - 2 Orpheus' quick fingers played a magical tune and the chains burst off.
 - 3 Orpheus crept nervously over Cerberus' monstrous paws and slipped out the room.
 - 5 In despair, Orpheus turned around without thinking to look for her.
 - 1 Orpheus set out on a daring quest to find Hades, to plead with him to return Eurydice to the human world.
5. How do we know that Cerberus was frightening? Use evidence from the text to explain your answer.
Pupils' own responses, such as: We know that Cerberus was frightening because it describes him as being a colossal three-headed dog that loomed over Orpheus menacingly. He is also described as a grotesque hound with monstrous paws.
6. Describe how you would feel and what you would do if you were Orpheus and could not hear Eurydice following behind you in the boat.
Pupils' own responses, such as: I would be worried about Eurydice's safety and tempted to turn around to look to see if she were safe. I would not turn around, however, as I would remember Hades' words that Eurydice would follow unharmed if I did not look back.

7. Draw four lines to match the type of music Orpheus played with the different events in the story.

8. Compare and contrast the music that Orpheus played at two different points in the story. Why did it change?

Pupils' own responses, such as: Orpheus played beautiful, enchanting music at the beginning compared to bitter, sombre music at the end. It changed because his mood changed from being happy and in love at the beginning to sad and lonely at the end.

9. Orpheus faced three obstacles on his journey out of the underworld. What were these obstacles? Which do you think was the most challenging and why?

Pupils' own responses, such as: The first obstacle was a huge wooden door chained shut. The next was a dank, dark room with Cerberus (Hades' grotesque, three-headed hound) guarding it. The final obstacle was "slick black hands and arms" formed from the inky waters of the river Styx attacking him.

I think the most challenging was the slick black hands pulling him down because he was being physically attacked by something and could barely reach for his lyre to try and play music to calm the waters.

10. Was Orpheus' quest really that difficult? Explain your answer in detail.

Pupils' own responses, such as: In theory, Orpheus' quest was easy because all he had to do was not turn back to look at Eurydice. However, when he was faced with the different obstacles and was worried about Eurydice's safety, he couldn't resist turning around to check that she was unharmed.